One Reel

It is possible to see in New Magazine, No. 30, many of the wonders of nature in the natural world. In the very first episode the mirror is held up to nature and through the medium of water reflection the beauties of camera reproductions are shown. Miss Annie P. Roe earns her living and has done so for a number of years by counting money. She has been at it fifty years and has counted a few hundred thousand dollars over her first billion in the Treasury at Washington.

"The Hearthbug," or as it is technically called, "The Lepismidae," is found in the chinks of walls and fireplaces and under the floor boards. Its peculiar domestic economy and the Teutonic attitude of the male toward the female are interestingly portrayed in this screen magazine. Lillian Russell shows how to stop a double chin. Sr. Falconi shows how to tell if your eye is quick. S. Zalud displays forthcoming feminine fashions while our own chemist breaks up a drop of water for you into two parts hydrogen and one part of oxygen.

The magazine closes with a photomovie of Priscilla Dean, who has just signed another long-term contract with the Universal.
